WASHINGTON LETTER.
 (From our regular correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 7, 1889.
 Will Secretaries Gresham and Carlisle retire from the cabinet? If that question has been asked once this week it has been asked ten thousand times, and the reason is not difficult to locate, although to tell the truth no one expected family jars in the administration before the time usually allotted for the honeymoon had fairly expired. These two Secretaries are the only men of proven strength and individuality in the cabinet, and the prediction was freely made by Democrats as well as by Republicans, when they first accepted their present positions that it was only a question of time when they would revolt. Well, they haven't exactly revolted, but they have reached that stage of mind which is next door to open revolt—they regret having joined the cabinet, and any day one or both of them may tender their resignations, unless they are treated a little more like advisers, instead of clerks, by Mr. Cleveland, and that isn't at all probable. It is well nigh certain that if these two men could have back the positions they gave up to enter the cabinet that they would be very lively in getting out of their present very unpleasant situation. Indeed, Mrs. Carlisle has not hesitated to say as much concerning her husband. Secretary Carlisle's pride keeps his mouth shut; he entered the cabinet against the wishes and protests of his strongest and closest friends, and, as his wife says, "is trying to grin and bear it." Secretary Gresham's temper, which often gets the best of him, is responsible for the condition of his mind having become known to some of his friends, and friends, even the best of them, will talk you know.

Those who thought, or at least pretended to think that the names of Lincoln and Grant would cause the present administration to allow Hon. Robert T. Lincoln to continue as U. S. Minister to Great Britain and Col. Fred D. Grant as Minister to Austria now know better. Ex-Secretary Bayard, who stands and has stood for everything that was opposed to what Lincoln and Grant stood for, succeeds the first and becomes the first American Ambassador, and Judge Bartlett Tripp, of South Dakota, who first demanded the position of U. S. Land Commissioner as a reward for the part he took in sending Senator Roach to the U. S. Senate from North Dakota, the latter. So much for Democratic veneration for the names of Lincoln and Grant.

The fact that Senator Gorman has not called at the White House since the present occupant was inaugurated has been the cause of no end of gossip. According to Mr. Gorman's friends he has not called because he has not been asked to do so, and will not until he receives an invitation. Some of Mr. Cleveland's talking friends say that he has not forgiven the Maryland Senator for his hesitation at the Chicago convention, and that he intends to punish him by ignoring him. By and by this may breed trouble, if it isn't fixed up some way. Gorman has been credited with securing more appointments in the Government Printing office than any other Democratic Senator, and it was to make sure that his prestige in that office would be maintained that he had himself made chairman of the Senate committee on Printing. Now, if Mr. Cleveland's Public Printer attempts the ignoring process there will be trouble right away, and it will be serious trouble too, see if it isn't.

It is now stated that the administration is to have a financial bill as well as a tariff bill, and that Mr. J. H. Eckels, of Ottawa, Ill., who was this week nominated for Comptroller of the Currency, is the man who is to prepare it. Mr. Eckels, who is here, admits that he knows nothing about finance, having given all his time to the practice of law, and members of the Senate committee on Finance, to which his nomination was referred, do not like the idea of a man without financial experience in being put into such an important position, although they may make a favorable report, because of the otherwise good reputation of Mr. Eckels.

Gen. Harrison appears to have known better than some of his critics did what he was doing when he made Judge Jackson, of Tennessee, a Justice of the U. S. Supreme Court. This week Justice Jackson handed down an opinion in a decision that gave the states rights doctrine as hard a single blow as it ever received. The decision was that state courts may try a prisoner brought by a requisition from another state on charges other than those set forth in the requisition papers: that states do not stand towards each other as independent foreign nations do, their sovereignty being limited by the Federal Constitution.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 7, 1889.

Will Secretaries Gresham and Carlisle retire from the cabinet? If that question has been asked once this week it has been asked ten thousand times, and the reason is not difficult to locate, although to tell the truth no one expected family jars in the administration before the time usually allotted for the honeymoon had fairly expired. These two Secretaries are the only men of proven strength and individuality in the cabinet, and the prediction was freely made by Democrats as well as by Republicans, when they first accepted their present positions that it was only a question of time when they would revolt. Well, they haven't exactly revolted, but they have reached that stage of mind which is next door to open revolt—they regret having joined the cabinet, and any day one or both of them may tender their resignations, unless they are treated a little more like advisers, instead of clerks, by Mr. Cleveland, and that isn't at all probable. It is well nigh certain that if these two men could have back the positions they gave up to enter the cabinet that they would be very lively in getting out of their present very unpleasant situation. Indeed, Mrs. Carlisle has not hesitated to say as much concerning her husband. Secretary Carlisle's pride keeps his mouth shut; he entered the cabinet against the wishes and protests of his strongest and closest friends, and, as his wife says, "is trying to grin and bear it." Secretary Gresham's temper, which often gets the best of him, is responsible for the condition of his mind having become known to some of his friends, and friends, even the best of them, will talk you know.

Those who thought, or at least pretended to think that the names of Lincoln and Grant would cause the present administration to allow Hon. Robert T.

Lincoln to continue as U. S. Minister to Great Britain and Col. Fred D. Grant as Minister to Austria now know better.

Ex-Secretary Bayard, who stands and has stood for everything that was opposed to what Lincoln and Grant stood for, succeeds the first and becomes the first American Ambassador, and Judge Bartlett Tripp, of South Dakota, who first demanded the position of U. S. Land Commissioner as a reward for the part he took in sending Senator Roach to the U. S. Senate from North Dakota, the latter. So much for Democratic veneration for the names of Lincoln and Grant.

The fact that Senator Gorman has not called at the White House since the present occupant was inaugurated has been the cause of no end of gossip. According to Mr. Gorman's friends he has not called because he has not been asked to do so, and will not until he receives an invitation. Some of Mr. Cleveland's talking friends say that he has not forgiven the Maryland Senator for his hesitation at the Chicago convention, and that he intends to punish him by ignoring him. By and by this may breed trouble, if it isn't fixed up some way.

Gorman has been credited with securing more appointments in the Government Printing office than any other Democratic Senator, and it was to make sure that his prestige in that office would be maintained that he had himself made chairman of the Senate committee on Printing. Now, if Mr. Cleveland's Public Printer attempts the ignoring process there will be trouble right away, and it will be serious trouble too, see if it isn't.

It is now stated that the administration is to have a financial bill as well as a tariff bill, and that Mr. J. H. Eckels, of Ottawa, Ill., who was this week nominated for Comptroller of the Currency, Eckels, who is here, admits that he knows nothing about finance, having given all his time to the practice of law, and members of the Senate committee on Finance, to which his nomination was referred, do not like the idea of a man without financial experience in being put into such an important position, although they may make a favorable report, because of the otherwise good reputation of Mr. Eckels.

better than some of his critics did what he was doing when he made Judge Jackson, of Tennessee, a Justice of the U. S. Supreme Court. This week Justice

Jackson handed down an opinion in a decision that gave the states rights doctrine as hard a single blow as it ever courts may try a prisoner brought by a requisition from another state on charges other than those set forth in the requisition papers: that states do not stand towards each other as independent foreign nations do, their sovereignty being limited by the Federal Constitution.

I suffered from acute inflammation in my nose and head for a week at a time

I could not see. I used Ely's Cream

Balm and in a few days I was cured. It
